Our Vision of Whole Personal Care

For years, the expression "personal care" meant—and still means in most cases—a set of products that are generally associated with personal hygiene and grooming. These products—lotions, shampoos, conditioners, soaps and gels, even toothpaste and shaving gear, among others—all have one essential distinguishing characteristic: they are all applied to the outside of our bodies. We do not eat them, drink them, or otherwise intentionally ingest them.

And though these personal care products can have significant effects on the inside of our bodies (for good or ill), we are in general only vaguely aware of these effects and their possible consequences for our health as well as our appearance.

All of this is very interesting because the literal understanding of the phrase "personal care" is just that—care of the person. This is exactly what Cell Tech is all about: care of the person... the whole person, inside and out.

This is also why our nutritional supplements and foods are as important to Cell Tech Whole Personal Care as are our lotions, shampoos, bath gels, and creams.
